Summer Issue

Staying Strong

Focus On: Transition

Building Capacity

In California, he has worked as a special education teacher, a school counselor, and as a liaison officer. Click on the Academic Anchor tab.

A presentation on the project at Old DoD High School was recently given by Dr. John Nunnery, executive director of the California Department of Education. Dr. Nunnery mentioned that the DoD High School has implemented a student identification system for military families. The system allows the school to track the academic progress of military students and keep them on track with their peers.

The school has also conducted a survey on the school climate aspects of military students. The results will be presented this fall in the annual report.

The project has allowed the high school to access additional resources and support for military students. The school has also created a new website for military families, which provides guidance to military students and offers resources to educators.

There are also growing signs that the efforts of all the non-profit organizations, governmental agencies, university partners, districts, and educators are working together to improve services for military students. Here are a few findings:

- About one in four children of parents deployed during their childhood development. This can be a challenging time for military students and their families.
- Parents by developing and implementing tablet and smartphone applications that can help to improve school climate for military students.
- Academic achievement and well-being of military students can be improved by providing additional resources and support. This can include additional counseling and other support to help direct additional counseling and other support to military students.
- Early intervention programs can help to prevent the onset of victimization behaviors and substance use for military students.
- Military students and their families need to be supported to adapt to adolescence and high school with a parent deployment.
- Special education materials and curriculum that focuses on strengthening students' academic, emotional, and social needs have been provided.
- Parents can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.
- Liaison officers can contact even before their children enroll.

We will provide more details on this new initiative in next month's issue.